1. Henry Cloud and John Townsend, Boundaries in Dating (Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 2000), 20.

2. Genesis 2:24 isn't writing a rule that all men will leave their families to join their wives' families. It was often the opposite case in the Bible. According to theologian K. A. Matthews, "It was customary in Israel for a man to remain, not leave, his father's household," as in the case of Rebekah going to live with Isaac and his family. The "leaving" that Genesis 2:24 is referring to here is metaphorical. The separation implies that the man and woman form a new emotional, psychological, physical, and spiritual bond between each other, and the man initiates this process. See K. A. Mathews, Genesis 1–11:26, vol. 1A, (Nashville, TN: Broadman & Holman, 1996), 223.
